STAND ALONE MODULES

ORGANIZED BY

Center for Global Politics at the Freie Universität Berlin

ARE YOU A PHD-CANDIDATE IN GLOBAL POLITICS/INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS?

Would you like to gain more knowledge on International Relations theories and methods in Social Sciences in order to support your research? The Center for Global Politics is offering you the unique opportunity to participate in three stand-alone online courses:

➔ Theory I: Macro-Theoretical Approaches to International Relations

This module provides a comprehensive introduction to the field of International Relations Theory enabling students to contextualise the complexity of today's politics. It will do so by specifically addressing questions and problems of theoretical choice. The module is therefore related to theoretical and conceptual work at an early stage of the Ph.D. project.

➔ Theory II: Current Debates in Global Politics

Here we present in-depth coverage of current debates in global politics. This module is related to historical, conceptual, and empirical work in the field of international relations and global politics. Innovative approaches like flows, scapes and networks will be covered.

➔ Methodology: Designing and Conducting Social Research

This module gives students a thorough understanding of both quantitative and qualitative methods used in social sciences. Besides an introduction into methodological approaches, the module enables students to devise a research design by using deductive or realistic research strategies, suggesting viable research questions and hypotheses, putting these into practice, and selecting, if applicable, variables and indicators.

➔ Join the intensive seminar

Each module is accompanied by an intensive seminar taking place at either FU Berlin or one of our renowned partner universities in China. You have the option to join the intensive seminar and meet your fellow students in person.
